-Marissa Woodmansee, Juvenile Services Director, will provide an update on the Stepping Up for Juvenile Justice in Kansas program. Governor Laura Kelly, in collaboration with the Kansas Department of Corrections (KDOC), initiated the juvenile justice-focused Stepping Up initiative to address the prevalence of behavioral health needs among youth in Kansas. The program's aim is to reduce the use of detention and increase connections to improve outcomes for youth and families and enhance community safety.

Marissa Woodmansee, Juvenile Services Director, said Governor Laura Kelly, in collaboration with the Kansas Department of Corrections, initiated the juvenile justice focused Stepping Up initiative to address the prevalence of behavioral health needs among youth in Kansas. The program's aim was to reduce the use of detention and increase connections to improve outcomes for youth and families and enhance Community safety. Woodmansee said the model was used with adults and had now expanded into the juvenile world. As part of a pilot program, Woodmansee and her team were asked to answer questions that included such things as Do you have local resources? What are your strengths and weaknesses?

What does data support? What funding is available? She also explained that there are "intercepts" at the points of contact – Prevention and Early Intervention (school resource offers, behavioral health and substance abuse resources); Law Enforcement Contact and Initiated Diversion (law enforcement, Juvenile Services); Referrals, Detention and Diversion; Judicial Processing; Detention and Reentry / Aftercare.
